

A MISSING PACKAGE.

An Express Package Containing $3,800
Mysteriously Disappears.

The Company's Officers as Dumb as Oysters—Larry Hazen Working Up the Case.

Early yesterday morning a rumor prevailed upon the street that the Adams Express Company had lost a package of money variously estimated at from $1,000 to $18,000; some asserting that the package had been lost in transit by accident, and others that it had been stolen. There was an air of mystery about the office, and the officials were non-committal concerning the matter, evading as far as possible answers to interrogatories, and positively refusing to state the amount of money contained in the missing package. Superintendent Zimmerman, of Cincinnati; Detective Larry Hazen, of the same place, and John J. Henderson, of this city, were in consultation yesterday, and there was hardly a question but the company has lost a money package, the facts about which they are not disposed to give to the public. As the sources from which reliable information could be obtained see fit to close their mouths, street gossip had to be depended upon for information with reference thereto. The story is, briefly, that John O'Hara, night clerk of the Adams Express Company, was in charge of the office gave the impression that the package contained $3,800, and was destined to an Eastern city from one of the banks at this place. Acting upon this "pointer" the banks were visited, and inquiry developed the fact that on Tuesday evening the Merchants National Bank contained in care of the Adams Express Company a package containing $3,800 in currency, directed to Hon. A. N. Wyman, Treasurer of the United States, at Washington, and being received for by H. Gansberg. This is supposed to be the missing package, and among others which the clerk started to deliver at the depot.

The theory has been advanced that the package was lost on the way to the depot, and that its disappearance is the result of accident. Another is that some mistake was made in sending it, it being enclosed with other packages and received with them. A large amount of matter was sent out that evening, and the company is trusting that answers in return to inquiries from some of the Eastern points will bring to light the missing package. During the afternoon it was said that O'Hara was under surveillance at the Denison Hotel, and a reporter called at that place but could learn nothing concerning the truth or falsity of the statement. He visited Mr. Zimmerman's room, but it was evidently not that gentleman's day for keeping open house, though Larry said, and a young man whom the reporter supposed to be O'Hara occupied the room. Mr. Hazen expressed regret that he could not give any information concerning the missing package, and the caller was forced to take his word, though he did not appear to be bound down with grief on that account. "Is that O'Hara sitting there?" asked the reporter. Hazen vouchsafed a negative answer to this query, and the reporter withdrew, in the belief that the young man was O'Hara, and that there was some truth in the street rumor that he was practically under surveillance at the Denison.

THE POLICE BOARD.

Mr. Frenzel Reappointed for This City and Dr. Mulhausen for Evansville—Malott's Successor.

At the meeting of the State officers yesterday morning Mr. John P. Frenzel was reappointed a member of the Police Board of this city, and Dr. Matthias Mulhausen was also reappointed a member of the board for Evansville. Both of the gentlemen have served very acceptably, and their reappointment for three years is a well merited compliment to the efficiency which they have already displayed. Mr. Malott's vacant position was filled, but the probabilities are that his successor will be appointed to-day. Among those who are added to the list of probabilities are Harvey Stont, Harry Adams and Mr. Farley. The Governor is said to prefer John B. Elam for the position. The policy of the State officers will be to appoint none who is not in sympathy with the bill incorporating the Metropolitan force, as they do not want the enforcement of its provisions obstructed.

Selling His Landlady's Horse.

John Daniels was arrested by Officers Laporte and Hagedorn and slated at the station-house for grand larceny. He had taken a horse to the Thompson sale stable, on West Washington street, which was auctioned off for $21, which bid was afterward taken up from the original bidder by Mahlon Thompson, who then paid Daniels $5 to bind the sale. The affair had a suspicious look and the officers arrested Daniels, who, when he reached the station-house, claimed to have been the owner of the horse for six months and to have purchased it of one John Kelly, a mile east of Greensfield. Officer Laporte said there was no such person as Kelly, and Daniels then said, if the officers would go with him to Brightwood, he would satisfy them he was all right; but as he admitted having been under arrest recently, the invitation was declined. Just then a message came from Brightwood stating that Daniels had borrowed the horse in the morning of his landlady, Mrs. Roberts, for a few hours, and that he was owing her seventy-five dollars for board. That settled it, and Daniels went behind the bars.

John R. Rogers' "Wife."

Mr. C. O. Rogers, agent of Minnie Palmer, was yesterday met by a reporter of this paper, and the following conversation ensued:

Mr. Rogers, tell me—Is Miss Palmer Mrs. John Rogers? Now, tell us truly.

Mr. Rogers gave the scribe one long, despairing look, and then, after a short, low whistle to himself, said:

"Why, don't you know the truth of that matter yet?"

The newspaper man confessed that he didn't.

"Well," said Mr. Rogers, "I thought it was long ago understood that, although my brother John would not object to winning the little lady for his wife, I know that she would soon marry the Turkish Giant; for, while John R. (as Miss Palmer calls him) is good enough as her manager, he is not the sort of a man she wants for a husband. Besides, she is already engaged to a wealthy New Yorker (a prominent young yachtman)." "But how about all those rumors and people who claim to have proof of the marriage?" "Well, let them put up their money—those that have 'proof'—the rumors are only rumors. I will take all the bets I can get." "Are you certain of what you say?" "Yes; for although there is a possibility of Miss Minnie changing her mind and marrying some one else, her choice will not fall upon John R., you may rest assured. Our next President being a bachelor, may become the New Yorker's rival, who knows? He couldn't find a more estimable little lady."

The Roller Rinks.

Judging by the crowds at the Wigwam Rink at the sessions yesterday one could but conclude all the inhabitants of the city had been attacked with a sudden mania for roller skating; but, like the proverbial omnibus, there is always room for one more, as the management will endeavor to accommodate all who come. Last night a special feature was a "forfeit race," in which Messrs. Charles Pearson, Charles Sims, Horace Stont and Harry Butterfield were the entries, a distance of two miles. A condition of the race was that the slowest skater should wheel the winner twice around the rink in a gaily decorated wheelbarrow, which feat was performed by Mr. Stont, Mr. Butterfield being the "passenger." The management deserves commendation for their endeavor to please the patrons of this popular resort with the special features that have been, and will continue to be, given.

The polo game at the Meridian Rink to-night promises to be more interesting and exciting than the opening game of Friday night last. The Meridian Club has kindly loaned the Indianapolis Club the services of Landis and Deitrick for this game, and with the additional strength of Manager Murray the Indianapolis Club is confident of being able to secure a victory. The following gentlemen will constitute the playing sides in to-night's game:

A Baggageman's Record.

John H. McGinnis, baggageman on the Big Four Road on the Chicago Division, has kept an account of the baggage handled by him during the year 1884, and finds that he has handled 11,795 pieces. There are two trains each way on this division, and four daily trains to Cincinnati, on each of which the baggage is thought to be about the same. This, of course, will be handled during the year on the road from Cincinnati to Chicago.

The Commercial Travelers.

The report of D. W. Coffin, secretary and treasurer of the Commercial Travelers' Association of Indiana, shows a balance on hand of $5,238.10. During the year eight members have died, and their legal representatives have received from the association $10,970. The annual meeting of the association will be held at the Masonic Hall on Saturday next, at 11 o'clock a.m.

Union Prayer Meeting.

The union services in the Second Presbyterian Church yesterday morning were largely attended and of deep interest. It was led by Rev. J. A. Rondthaler, who spoke of the Lord's call upon this New Year's Day. The subject of the meeting this morning will be "Love for Soul."

GENERAL FOREIGN NEWS.

Message From Gordon, and the Mahdi
Also Heard From.

Cairo, Jan. 1.—General Wolsley received a small piece of paper with General Gordon's genuine seal on the back, dated December 14, saying Khartoum was all right. A dispatch has been received from the Mudir stating that an Arab from the Mahdi's camp had reached Dongola. He affirms that the Mahdi's followers are gathered in force at Misnehnek, twelve hours' march from Ommedman. They repeatedly attacked Ommedman, but had been repulsed with heavy loss, and were compelled to retreat to Misnehnek. Gordon, upon learning that the Bedonin Arabs came to the wells during the night, sent armed boats to guard the wells, causing great suffering among the rebels. Many died of smallpox and dysentery. The Mahdi withdrew his army to Jabbara, two days' march from Ommedman, and several tribes subsequently deserted. The Mahdi consulted the principal Chiefs, and intended to march against the Mudir of Dongola. The Chiefs professed readiness to follow if the Mahdi would charm off the bullets of the enemy by leading instead of following his troops. The next day the Mahdi told the Chiefs he had seen in a dream that the Mudir was a saint against whom it was useless to fight. This statement caused great alarm in the Mahdi's camp.

Bismarck on Gladstone—Other German News.

Berlin, Jan. 1.—Bismarck in a conversation with a newspaper correspondent today, denied that he had any personal enmity toward Gladstone. He said he viewed with equanimity the party struggles in England. He could have relied upon Lord Beaconsfield to keep England in accord with the rest of the Empire, but whatever Gladstone's policy might be was a matter of little concern to Germany.

The Berlin Tagblatt publishes a list of the names of the members of the central committee to raise a national subscription to be presented to Prince Bismarck as a fund to be devoted to colonial enterprises. The Westphalia Mercury announces on authority that the leaders of the Centre party have decided to oppose, on its third reading in the Reichstag, the proposal to create another directorship in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

The Grant Parade Made Up.

New York, Jan. 1.—General Grant's friends have pledged themselves to raise the $100,000 necessary to satisfy his debt to W. H. Vanderbilt. Mr. Vanderbilt having agreed to deduct $50,000 from the whole claim. The committee will pay Mr. Vanderbilt the money, and then hold General Grant's securities as a sort of trust fund during his lifetime. This will prevent them being touched by any other creditor. General Grant was out yesterday for the first time in many days. He hobbled into the Fifth Avenue Hotel on crutches, looking pale and careworn.

A Murder—Celebration of Emancipation.

RALEIGH, N. C., Jan. 1.—Alex. Black, colored, near Dover, shot and killed the wife of Mark McCleave. The cause of the crime is unknown. The murderer escaped. The colored residents of this city to-day celebrated Emancipation Day. Despite the cold weather there was a parade of troops and firemen, and a large gathering at the City Hall, where appropriate exercises were conducted and a number of speeches made.

Found Drowned.

Newburgh, N. Y., Jan. 1.—The body of Henry J. Hunter, one of the owners of the Beveridge Brewery, who disappeared yesterday and it was feared had been drowned, was found in the river today. The coroner's inquest found a verdict of death by drowning. Hunter had charge of the concern's accounts, and everything was found perfectly straight.

New Year's in New York.

New York, Jan. 1.—New Year's holiday passed off very quietly. The sky was clouded and the custom of making calls was not so universally carried out to-day as last New Year's, in fact the custom seems to be gradually falling into disuse. Nor did there seem to be many card baskets out either, and the refreshment tables were generally spread meagrely.

Coinage at Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 1.—The coinage at the United States Mint in this city during the last year aggregated 52,270,000 pieces, representing a value of $16,949,000. Of this amount $1,400,000 were gold pieces, $14,412,000 silver and $736,000 in silver base coins.

LOGAN IN THE LEGISLATURE.

An Incident of the Senator's Early Legislative Career.

[Lincoln (Ill.) Times.]
The friends of General John A. Logan are fond of alluding to the supposed Indian origin of their hero, and even fancy that he is a lineal descendant of that famous Mingo Chief of the same name. The truth is, he is of Irish descent, his father moving to America three years before the General was born.

Let that be as it may, he possesses many resemblances to his alleged ancestors, both in his character and in his features. There are many incidents in his life which exhibit the fire of his aboriginal prototypes. Scarcely a session of Congress but he has several combats and a supple and supple account of one or another of his associates. Some of his hottest fought battles have been in that arena; notably the protracted and for many years successful opposition to the Fitz John Porter bill.

One of his most daring fights was made when he first entered the Illinois Legislature. He was but thirty years of age, and came as the representative of Jackson County. At that time he was a Democrat of the "most strictest sect," and being a young man, was much more fiery and impetuous than now. The Republicans had elected William H. Bissell Governor. Bissell had served in Congress, and being a brilliant, dashing speaker, had offended the Southern chivalry of Jefferson Davis, which resulted in a challenge from that rash leader in rebellion and its prompt acceptance by Bissell. The matter was bridged over by mutual friends, so that an encounter on the so-called field of honor was avoided. The constitution of the State at that time made anyone who had sent or accepted challenge to fight a duel ineligible for the office of Governor. This was the case with Bissell during the canvass, but the very Logan, though it was his first appearance as a member of a public assembly, and he was unknown outside of his county, daring to raise the question after election, resolutely set to work to prevent Bissell's inauguration.

The Governor took the required oath, however, but when he transmitted his message to the House the swarthy and hitherto unknown member from Jackson opened the flood-gates of his wrath, and for two days poured the bitterest denunciations upon the head of the surprised old Governor. Logan reviewed the whole ground, proved by undeniable facts that Bissell had accepted a challenge to fight a duel; quoted the oath of office, which proscribed duelists or persons who had sent or accepted challenges, and deduced the conclusion that the old veteran who had just taken the oath was a liar. The whole house was astounded at the audacity of the young member and the scathing character of his lengthy speech. Bissell justified his action on the ground that when he accepted the challenge from Davis he was a member of Congress, and was out of the jurisdiction of the State of Illinois. Technically he was, perhaps, correct, but Logan's argument gave him a deep wound, and it no doubt hastened his death. The attack fell upon him like a blow from a trip-hammer. He died before his term of office expired.

A REAL GOOD FISH STORY.

A Story that Bears Marks of Genius in Conception and Narration.

Our genial fellow townsman, Dr. Gimp, was called from his bed at 2 o'clock this morning to attend a patient suffering from a most extraordinary complication. He found Mr. John Junkin almost dead with gasping, and at the same time horribly bitten and mangled. After relieving the human sufferings of the patient, Dr. Gimp succeeded in extracting from him the extraordinary circumstances under which he narrowly escaped death.

Mr. Junkin was driving home in his gig about 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon, after spending the day gathering horse chestnuts on the hills. His horse became very restive, and thinking the noble animal might be thirsty, Mr. Junkin sought out the Hoxa-woltable farm, a deep pool surrounded by gloomy cliffs. On one side of it was a large approach for wheeled vehicles, and when Mr. Junkin drove down the shelving bank his beast snorting with delight at sight of the translucent water, the shades of evening were already falling rapidly over the hills.

When the horse had waded in until the water came up to his belly, and was eagerly swilling the crystal fluid, the animal suddenly gave a snort of mingled pain and terror, and plunged violently to one side. His uneasiness increased, and in a moment the astonished beast gave vent to a shrill shriek. By that time he had plowed the water into foam, on which dark red flecks of blood were seen, and had so far slipped into the water as to be in danger of drowning his master. Ever and anon a shadowy mass would rise nearly to the surface, and a gleam of white teeth could be seen. It was a monstrous Dutch carp. Mr. Junkin was thoroughly alarmed. Suddenly the great fish swam to the surface, and leaping over the dashboard, bit a large fat piece out of the man's calf. The taste of human blood seemed to infuriate the gigantic perch, which lost all control of itself and bit off one of Mr. Junkin's fingers, lacerated his left leg in several places, swallowed the roof of his right boot, and dashed him in the side. The wretched man defended himself as best he could with his buggy whip, which he applied so desperately that the carp roared with rage. All the while the horse stood still, uttering low moans of fear. Half dead, Mr. Junkin dragged himself to shore, leaving the gig and now expiring steed to the mercy of the ferocious fish.

Helen Perkins, Hans Apfelbaum and Inigo Smith, the latter the son of a night, they will be well armed and expect to find a beautiful gold ring in the carp's nest, into which it is believed Mr. Junkin inadvertently drove. In consequence of the appropriateness of his name, Inigo Smith will enter the water first.

A Senator's Monkey Story.

[Washington Correspondent Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle.]

Senator Ransom tells this story: An Italian organ-grinder came to his section of the State. He brought the traditional and inevitable monkey along. After some mournful melodies the beast, in a sadly comical way, hopped
